| (57) | The Invention is a solar-powered dehydrating apparatus which provides an energy-efficient, structured airflow drying system that ensures uniform drying and optimized moisture removal. Compared to existing drying solutions, it introduces enhanced airflow control, scalable drying capacity, and automation features, making it ideal for large-scale agricultural applications. The apparatus is constructed from an intermodal container (CC) and features a rectangular | | | design with at least one door for operator access. The SDA comprises an outer steel container (C1) and an inner chamber (C2), with an inter-skin space (ISS) between them for air circulation. Fans draw air into the ISS, where it is warmed before entering the inner chamber. The inner chamber contains shelves (S1) fitted with ventilated mesh (NN) to hold crops and facilitate air circulation. Warm, dry air dehydrates the crops, and moist air is expelled through outlet pipes (OP) at the bottom of the chamber. The system includes temperature sensors and timers for precise control and can be powered by solar panels or the grid. This invention provides an energy-efficient, cost-effective, and environmentally sustainable solution for crop dehydration.

 (72) GRACE Nyirarukundo
 (57) Diabetes mellitus is a chronic condition that significantly increases the risk of foot complications, particularly diabetic foot ulcers (DFUs). These ulcers can lead to severe outcomes, including amputation and mortality. This research presents the development of smart insoles equipped with advanced sensors specifically, a heartbeat sensor (MAX30102), a temperature sensor (LM35), and a pressure sensor (FSR) integrated with an ESP32 micro-controller for real-time monitoring of foot health. The smart insoles aim to detect early signs of DFUs by continuously monitoring pressure, temperature, and pulse oximetry. This proactive approach can significantly improve patient outcomes by facilitating timely interventions and reducing the incidence of DFUs.

- (57) This invention aims at developing an Internet of Things (IoT) based Electromagnetic Compatibility (EMC) real-time and remote monitoring system for electronic equipment. IoT is a low-cost and emerging technology for real-time data monitoring. The system was developed and tested in a medical device environment as one of the sensitive case studies. The device has been developed in accordance with international guidelines and standards. The device can work in the range of non-ionizing frequencies from 100 KHz to 100 MHz for low frequencies and from 100 MHz to 3 GHz for high frequencies or ionizing frequencies. The non-ionizing frequencies can detect electromagnetic fields from power lines, TV, cell phones among others and the ionizing frequencies can detect frequencies from electronic devices such as X-rays, infrared devices, just to mention a few. After several experiments on medical devices from different hospitals (i.e., Muhima Hospital; Ruhengeri Hospital; Rubavu Hospital and Rwamagana Hospital); it has been found that the system works properly by detecting the electromagnetic field from biomedical devices and sending the data to the cloud. These measurement data can be accessed everywhere by using computers or smart mobile phones.

- (54) DISINFECTION AND RESIDUAL GAS RECOVERY DEVICE FOR WATER
- (71) MITHRIL WATER INTERNATIONAL LTD
- (72) Zhang Meng, Zhao Yunhe, Bai Rui
- (57) The present utility model discloses an ozone disinfection and residual gas recovery device for water purifiers, which belongs to the field of water purification equipment technology. This device constructs an integrated technology system of “high-efficiency solubilization-directional circulation-catalytic degradation-full-dimensional sealing, “including a gas-liquid mass transfer optimization subsystem, a residual control subsystem, and a full-dimensional sealing assurance subsystem. In the gas-liquid mass transfer optimization subsystem, the supersonic jet aeration unit, based on the Venturi effect, refines the ozone bubble size to 50-100 μ m, increasing the mass transfer coefficient by 40%.The opposed gas path layout constructs a helical gas-liquid mixing flow field, raising the concentration in dead zones to above 0.6mg/L. In the residual control subsystem, the dynamic equilibrium exhaust unit automatically starts when the ozone concentration is greater than 0.1ppm, thanks to a vacuum pump and specific pipeline design. The catalytic degradation unit, utilizing a MnO₂-TiO₂ composite catalytic bed, achieves deep purification with ozone residuals less than 0.05ppm and a degradation rate greater than 99.9%. The full-dimensional sealing assurance subsystem employs a three-stage gradient sealing structure, which, through mechanical interlocking, conical interference fit, and dynamic pressure adaptive sealing, reduces the leakage rate to less than 0.05%, extends the temperature tolerance range to -20°C60°C, and can also monitor the sealing status in real-time. Compared with traditional solutions, this device increases the ozone utilization rate to 92%, reduces the residual concentration to 0.03ppm, achieves a sealing life of 8000 cycles, and shortens the disinfection time to 8 minutes. It is characterized by high efficiency, low residuals, and high reliability, and promotes the upgrade of water purifiers towards intelligent disinfection.

(57) This project entitled "IoT Based Real Time and Remote Monitoring System of Soil and Environmental Parameters for Cassava Farming" is about the development of a device based on internet of things for real time monitoring of soil nutrients (i.e.; Moisture content, Ph, N, P, K) and environmental parameters (i.e. Humidity, Temperature and CO2) for enhancing the crop farming in terms yield and quality. The implementation took the case of cassava farming. The implementation started with the survey on cassava crop, to know the current situation of cassava value chain from farm to market in Rwanda, then this followed with the development of the device, the device deployment followed in cassava farm for testing and data collection for a period of nine months. The data collected was analyzed to evaluate the efficiency and relevance of the device. To validate the results six research papers were published in peer reviewed international conferences and journals, public awareness was conducted and the results were compared to other results for confirmation. The device was found to be relevant and useful, especially for cassava farmers who cultivate the crop for business and market purposes.

- (57) The invention relates to a fast-track organic waste processing machine designed to convert raw organic waste into stable, high-quality compost within 24-48 hours, significantly reducing the time required by conventional methods. The system comprises a hopper, gate, and crushing chamber for size reduction, a fermentation chamber with an intermittently rotating mixing shaft and thermophilic heater, a temperature sensor connected to an Arduino Uno for automated control, and an LCD display for real-time monitoring. A leachate collection and recirculation system maintains optimal moisture, while a curing bay and screening unit ensures final compost quality. The integration of mechanical processing, controlled mixing, thermophilic heating, and automated electronic monitoring enables rapid, efficient, and hygienic composting suitable for agricultural and horticultural applications
